TITLE SLIDE

The photograph that belongs here:

Wide shot of the Fort Collins room mid-talk. Audience faces lit by the screen, not the stage. The point is the room, not the speaker – if a speaker is visible at all they should be small and off to one side.

You Had to be There

ITEM 1 – WHO IS TALKING

The photograph that belongs here:

Justin at the Nerd Nite Fort Collins mic, mid-sentence, hands moving. Not posed, not a headshot, no podium portrait. A frame grab off one of the show videos is better than anything taken on purpose.

ITEM 1 – TRAJECTORIES

The photograph that belongs here:

Many separate tracks arriving at one point. Hand-drawn pencil lines on a chart, or a long-exposure of light trails. Deliberately not a tidy infographic – the lines should look flown, not plotted.

Talks. Mars. An abstract. An organ.

“You had to be there.”

ITEM 4 – HANNAH, THE DONNER PARTY

The photograph that belongs here:

Hannah Bauer on stage at the Wolverine, her own Donner Party slide behind her. Ideally caught mid-laugh, or with the room mid-laugh. Second choice: her poster art for S2025E01.

Why did that just work?

ITEM 6 – MARS

The photograph that belongs here:

A rover alone on Mars with an empty horizon behind it. No people, no mission control, no Earth in frame. The emptiness is the whole argument, so pick the loneliest NASA/JPL public-domain frame available.

The telemetry is complete.

The chronicle is not.

ITEM 7 – JOHN ANDERSON, WORM MAJIX

The photograph that belongs here:

John at the Wolverine, dressed exactly as he dresses for any other evening there, talking with his hands. DO NOT put his abstract text on a slide. The slide is the man, not the paragraph.

ITEM 8 – THE ASSEMBLY

The photograph that belongs here:

Hands. Audience members at tables with organ parts spread out in front of them, mid-assembly. Faces optional, hands mandatory. If one frame shows strangers building something together, that is the one.

ITEM 8 – THE VOLUNTEER AND THE ORGAN

The photograph that belongs here:

Joel Bacon at the keyboard of the assembled 2-octave organ AND the volunteer working the pump handle, both in the same frame. The volunteer is not optional – without that person there is no sound, and that is the last thing the room sees before the close.
